8. There was a barracks area just west of Zhmerinka station, about 100 meters north of the railroad. A group of men were receiving instruction in the use of two amphibious trucks. One of the vehicles was the American GMC DUKW type, and the other could not be identified. It had the general appearance and length of the DUKW, but the body was flatter, and it had tank tracks instead of tires. On the south side of the railroad, just opposite the barracks area, were eight rocket launchers, appearing to have 12 tubes each, and about 20 covered tanks. The tanks' main armament was rather long, but the type of tank was not identified. There were artillery, armored, and signal troops in the vicinity of the railroad station.
